New Science Building Gets Go-Ahead from CSU Trustees

Architecturally Dramatic Project to Bring Science, Math Faculty Together Under One Roof for First Time

A nearly 90,000 square foot science building set for completion in January 2009 will provide a modern new home for interdisciplinary scholarship on campus, as well as room for hundreds of new students to pursue science and math studies at Cal State Northridge.

The project received an important go-ahead on February 1, when the CSU's Board of Trustees approved schematics for the state-of-the-art structure, whose exterior will make a "dramatic architectural statement" in the university's southeast sector, adding to a surge of new construction and vitality in that area.

Construction on the four-story project, to include relocation of the existing stellar observatory, is set to start in January 2007. The current science buildings were erected in the late 1950s.

Funded through the Proposition 55 state capital construction measure approved by voters in 2004, the $46 million-plus building will be located on East University Drive/Lindley Avenue, south of the Botanic Garden. The building's main entry will open up to East University Drive and Sierra Walk, a major campus pedestrian promenade.

The modern new science building planned for CSUN's southeast sector will feature 33 laboratories and 13 "smart" lecture rooms to accommodate more students.

College of Science and Mathematics Dean Jerry Stinner said the building's innovative design will promote interdisciplinary research between CSUN biology and math faculty, who for the first time will be housed under the same roof.

"We hear a lot today about the importance of interdisciplinary research and that the real advances are occurring at the margins," said Dean Stinner.

"The increased interaction between the biology and math faculty will, I predict, result in increased collaborations in both teaching and scholarship." The math faculty, he noted, has for many years not been physically present in the science buildings.

Interdisciplinary collaboration will be fostered not only through the physical location of work areas, but by providing common gathering areas for students and faculty. "We recognize that, increasingly, science and mathematics are a communal affair," Stinner said.

The structure's 13 "smart" lecture rooms—seating a total of 770 science and math students at a time in 11,580 square feet of space—will help fill a critical need for more room.

"These relatively large classrooms are absolutely necessary to our growth," said Dean Stinner. The College of Science and Mathematics' rapidly growing student population—currently 2,872 full time equivalent students—is up more than 20 percent from the 2000–01 academic year enrollment.

For the two larger lecture rooms, accommodating 150 and 120 students, tiered seating has been planned. Dubbed "smart" because of their technological advantages, all the rooms provide for Internet hookup and multimedia presentations.

When added to the existing lecture rooms available in the current Science 1 building (Live Oak Hall), which will remain operational to serve the college's instructional and research needs, students and faculty will have the use of nearly 335,000 square feet of space devoted to

Northridge Second in State's Teacher Candidate Enrollment

Amid Warnings about Looming Teacher Shortage, CSUN Offers Many Pathways to a Credential

At a time when media headlines, think tanks and school districts are warning that California will be short roughly 100,000 teachers within the next 10 years, Cal State Northridge has been ranked second highest in the state in its enrollment of teaching candidates.

In its December 2005 report to the state Legislature, the California Commission on Teacher Credentialing identified Cal State Northridge as a national leader in contributing new lifeblood to the ranks of teachers.

Through its programs, CSUN is working to ease the growing gap caused by attrition, an expanding student population, fewer college students entering teacher preparation programs and reduced class sizes.

Among California's 88 public and private institutions with programs preparing students for teaching careers, CSUN placed just behind National University in its 2003–04 teacher preparation enrollment.

Of the 67,595 students enrolled statewide for 2003–04, CSUN produced 4,354 who completed one or more courses in a program including supervised student teaching or internship teaching.

"I am pleased there are so many students who want to study with us," said Philip Rusche, dean of the Michael D. Eisner College of Education. "I think this reflects well on the confidence that aspiring teachers have in us. We're

Real Estate Investor Creates Music Endowment at Northridge

Barbera Family Endowment to Underwrite Music Ensemble Performances

Real estate investor and philanthropist Robert Barbera has created a $52,000 endowment to support performances by music students in Cal State Northridge's College of Arts, Media, and Communication.

The Barbera Family Endowment in Music Performance will be used to underwrite performances by the college's major music ensembles, including the Symphony Orchestra, the Wind Ensemble, the Jazz "A" Band and the Northridge Singers, as well as student opera presentations.

CSUN will celebrate the endowment's creation at a performance of the university's symphony orchestra, set for March 18 in Glendale's Alex Theatre.

A longtime university supporter, Barbera last year established the Robert Barbera Scholarship in Voice, in the Music Department. He also gives strong support to the College of Humanities' Italian program, and serves on the development committee of the Imagine the Arts Campaign for the university's new performing arts center.

"Cal State Northridge is a working man's college," said Barbera, himself a college scholarship recipient. "It's hard to keep up your studies while you're holding down a job.

"When you know that someone

who doesn't even know you is willing to support your college education, that makes your college education even more valuable," he said, describing the Barbera Family Endowment in Music Performance as a kind of loan. "The students are paying us back with their performances. The world is always a better place with educated, trained performers in it."

Barbera has been active in a number of Italian-American organizations, promoting a series of philanthropic ventures to encourage the study of Italian at CSUN and other universities. His wife, Jo, is a former employee of Northridge's Michael D. Eisner College of Education. ■ science and math learning.

An Academic Affairs planning team chaired by Associate Vice President for Academic Resources Spero Bowman worked with the college and the architects—Cannon Design—to contribute recommendations, guidance and ideas for the building.

"We are very pleased with the design of the new building," said the associate vice president. "Its exterior look will make a dramatic architectural statement."

Academic buildings always are a design challenge, Bowman added.

"New buildings are never big enough, nor equipped well enough to meet the requirements of the program or the occupants," he said, because funds seldom stretch far enough to cover all wish lists.

The architects' "creative and cost-effective" approach, he said, resulted in a design that meets the specialized needs issuing from advances in science and from the demanding modern curricula critical to high student learning standards.

"Interestingly, the existing buildings were built about the time the Soviet Union launched Sputnik, and years before the laser was invented," said Bowman, noting that the new science facility will be light years ahead of the old.

Features will include, for example, a genetic counseling unit, a spacious biology stockroom, nine instructional wet labs, 18 research wet labs and laboratories for DNA, immunology, electron microscopy and DNA sequencing. Faculty offices, in the structure's northeast corner, will have views of the Botanic Garden.

Space also will be provided for the college's herbarium/insect and vertebrate collections, and research space has been designed for the Center for Cancer & Developmental Biology. A small research laboratory—called the Geology Clean Lab—has been designated for use by the Geology Department.

The use of water-conserving fixtures, natural daylight in labs and offices, reflective roof materials, drought-tolerant landscaping and shade trees will contribute to a high sustainability quotient for the building. ■ proud of the teachers who graduate from CSUN and of the administrators and counselors we graduate who enable teachers to be effective."

Rusche pointed out that CSUN offers students a variety of pathways to a teaching credential, including both post baccalaureate and baccalaureate opportunities. At the baccalaureate level, CSUN offers multiple and single subject specialties, and at the post baccalaureate level, there is the traditional fifth-year program, a one-year Accelerated Collaborative Teacher Preparation program, and a variety of internship programs.

The credentialing commission also examined the number of multiple subject, single subject and special education teaching and internship credentials issued at California state universities between July 2003 and July 2004.

Cal State Northridge prepared 1,901 such credential holders, second only to CSU Dominguez Hills among public universities in that achievement arena. It ranked fourth among all institutions, public and private included.

California's Senate Education Committee on January 25 convened a group of education stakeholders to get ideas on how to confront the coming teacher shortage, a crisis exacerbated by the near-term retirement of about a third of the state's teachers older than 50. Among them:

- Increasing funding to the CSU and UC systems to help boost the number of teacher candidates.
- Easing qualified out-of-state teachers' path to a California credential.
- Provision of housing subsidies, mortgage deferments or tax credits for those teachers serving on campuses typically avoided by experienced teachers. ■

In Brief

Gary Reichard is CSU's New Exec. Vice Chancellor

The CSU Board of Trustees this month appointed Gary Reichard executive vice chancellor and chief academic officer for the California State University system.

Reichard formerly was provost and senior vice president for academic affairs at Cal State Long Beach.

Affiliated with Long Beach since 1994, Reichard had held the chief academic officer post since 2002. He also served as associate vice president for academic personnel, planning and assessment.

Reichard's career has included service as chair of Florida Atlantic University's history department, as acting associate dean at the Schmidt College of Arts and Humanities, as associate vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Maryland, and as director of the University of Delaware's university honors program.

The CSU executive vice chancellor serves as a principal policy and executive management advisor to the chancellor. He acts for CSU Chancellor Charles B. Reed, in the chancellor's absence.

CSUN Soccer Stars Drafted

Willie Sims

Daniel Paladini

Two Cal State Northridge soccer stars are headed for the sport's professional stage after being drafted by Major League Soccer (MLS).

Cal State Northridge soccer star Willie Sims—the highest draft pick to come out of CSUN—on Jan. 20 was selected as the 23rd overall pick in the MLS 2006 Super Draft. Just one week later, Daniel Paladini was selected as the 24th overall pick in the MLS Supplemental Draft.

Sims was selected by the New England Revolution at the draft held in Philadelphia. Paladini was picked by the Los Angeles Galaxy in the second round of the supplemental draft, which was conducted by phone.

Sims and Paladini both had shining exits at CSUN, with Paladini earning Big West Midfielder of the Year and Sims earning his second Big West Conference Player of the Year award.

The two players' selection brings the number of Matador soccer players drafted by major league soccer to five in the last five years.

'radKIDS' Safety Skills Course is Set for March

CSUN's Public Safety Department in March will roll out a new "personal empowerment" safety education program for the five to 11-year old children of CSUN faculty and staff.

The radKIDS (Resist Aggression Defensively) nationwide non-profit program will teach lifesaving skills to children in a series of five two-hour sessions.

Among other skills, children will learn responses to bullying, gun and bike safety, avoidance of predators, good and bad touching, "stranger danger," Internet safety and planning for natural disaster emergencies.

CSUN police officer April Saucedo teaches defensive techniques to a youngster in radKIDS' pilot program at CSUN in 2005.

Faculty and staff are encouraged to register their children promptly, as the class is limited to 20, to be taught by specially trained CSUN police officers April Saucedo and Anthony Vargas.

"Parents can't be with their children 24 hours a day," said Officer Saucedo, who initiated the program at CSUN. "We have to give them skills to handle things in case they're ever in a dangerous situation."

Though it is an offshoot of the campus' successful RAD for Women program—which focuses on providing women with techniques for dealing with aggressive assault—radKIDS is not a martial arts program. Children do receive hands-on training in physical defense, said Saucedo.

"They also learn how to dial 911," she said, a skill not to be taken for granted. "Some kids just freeze. We use a toy phone and ask them questions just like a dispatcher would. We train them to be calm."

The cost is $10 per child, but each participant who completes the course can take it again, free of cost, any number of times up to the age of 12 years. Manuals are given to parents, who are encouraged to attend.

Classes are set for March 6, 7, 13, 14, and 15 from 4:15 p.m. to 6:15 p.m. For registration, contact CSUN's Crime Prevention and Community Relations office at (818) 677-7922. ■
