

123

-Challenges-

Being challenged is beneficial because it allows students to be prepared for college and

Create a curriculum that demonstrates high expectations for students' success and help them

Opportunities to experience higher education programs so they can get a glimpse of real life expectations

The John Stanford International School has implemented a sense of challenge into its curriculum. "It focuses on language and culture to prepare students for success" (13). The hallmarks of this school are that the children are

Out of the 13 percent of high school students that dropout of high school indicated that the The reason, why the dropped out, was due to the fact the classes were not

Global awareness in understanding other cultures that they would have never been aware of, they should be aware of the challenges they

More than 80 percent of Americans believe that high school graduates should be college and career ready, but less than 50 percent of believe they actually are.

Being challenged means that students need to develop "higher level thinking, communication, and problem solving skills." This is dependent on having good teachers.